VERDANT
SUSTAINABLE LIVING

Week 2 Marketing Collateral Design Report

Project: Marketing Collateral Design

Brand: VERDANT — Sustainable Living

Week: 2

Deliverables: Flyer, business card, tri-fold brochure, and creative process/design rationale.

1. Project overview

VERDANT — Sustainable Living is a sustainability-focused brand identity built around elegant design, responsible materials, durability, and environmentally conscious living. The Week 2 project applies the brand identity to marketing materials that introduce the brand, communicate its values, and encourage potential customers to explore its collection. The collateral set includes three formats: a promotional flyer, a business card, and a tri-fold brochure. Each format serves a different communication purpose while maintaining a consistent brand presentation.

2. Brand identity and visual direction

- Brand name: VERDANT
- Tagline: Sustainable Living
- Primary colour: Forest green
- Supporting colours: Sage green, warm off-white, and charcoal grey
- Visual style: Minimalist, natural, modern, and professional
- Typography direction: Bold, clear headings paired with readable supporting text
- Graphic element: Intersecting circular forms representing interconnected natural systems and sustainability

The visual direction uses restrained colours, generous whitespace, and simple geometric elements to communicate calmness, trust, and environmental responsibility. The same approach should be used across all collateral so the materials feel like parts of one brand system.

3. Marketing collateral

3.1 Promotional flyer

The flyer introduces VERDANT and communicates its sustainable-living message. Its headline is “Embrace a Greener Tomorrow, Starting at Home.” Supporting copy explains the brand’s aim to combine elegant design, everyday utility, and eco-conscious products. The flyer highlights four proposed selling points:

- Eco-friendly materials
- Minimalist design
- Product longevity and performance
- Lower-emission production and distribution

A closing call to action invites readers to discover the VERDANT collection. The flyer is intended for quick reading, promotional distribution, and brand awareness.

Note: Claims such as "100% certified eco-friendly," "carbon-neutral," or "zero plastic waste" should only be published if the brand can substantiate them with appropriate evidence and certifications.

3.2 Business card

The business-card mockup presents the VERDANT logo on a warm off-white background, with dark green typography and a clean, uncluttered layout. The front focuses on brand recognition, while the contact side places the logo beside the representative's name, role, email address, and website. The example mockup uses the name Alex Mercer, the title Founder & Principal Director, and the contact details alex@verdantliving.com and www.verdantliving.com. These should be treated as sample details and replaced with approved contact information before printing.

3.3 Tri-fold brochure

The brochure uses six panels across two sides to provide more detailed brand information.

Exterior panels

1. Inside flap — Our Journey: Explains the brand's origins and values, including ethical sourcing and waste reduction.
2. Back cover — Get in Touch: Provides contact and social-media information.
3. Front cover: Introduces VERDANT with the headline "Elevate Your Environment."

Interior panels

1. The Brand Promise: Covers transparency, indoor wellness, and ecological stewardship.
2. Product Features: Describes reclaimed timber, plant-based finishes, and renewable material compositions.
3. Design Integrity: Explains circular design, disassembly, and end-of-life material recovery.

The brochure provides more depth than the flyer and gives readers a structured overview of the brand's philosophy, material choices, and design principles.

4. Creative process and design rationale

The design process began by establishing a consistent visual language for VERDANT. Forest green was selected as the main brand colour because it creates a strong association with nature and environmental responsibility. Sage green provides a softer supporting tone, while warm off-white backgrounds keep the layouts light, refined, and readable. Charcoal grey adds contrast to smaller text. The logo's intersecting circular shapes provide a simple, recognizable graphic element. Repeating this motif across the flyer, business card, and brochure helps unify the collateral without making the layouts feel crowded.

Each item was designed around its intended use. The flyer prioritizes a headline, brief introduction, selling points, and a call to action. The business card prioritizes contact information and brand recognition. The brochure uses a six-panel structure to organize detailed information into manageable sections. The overall design rationale is to make sustainability feel practical, contemporary, and approachable rather than overly technical. Consistent colour, typography, spacing, and graphic elements reinforce recognition across different formats.

5. Print production specifications

Before final printing, apply the following production guidelines:

- Flyer: A4 or another approved promotional size, with readable headings and body text.
- Business card: Standard local printer dimensions, with important text kept inside the safe area.
- Brochure: Three-panel fold layout, with panel widths adjusted to the printer's folding requirements.
- Bleed: Add 3 mm on each edge where required by the printer.
- Safe margins: Keep essential text and logos at least 5 mm inside the trim edge, or follow the printer's specifications.
- Colour mode: Use CMYK for professional print output when supported by the design application.
- Export: Use print-quality PDF with bleed and crop marks when requested by the printer.
- Quality check: Review spelling, contrast, alignment, fold order, contact information, and image resolution before export.

These are recommended production settings; the final dimensions and export settings should be confirmed with the chosen print provider.

6. Consistency and quality review

The three collateral pieces should be reviewed together before submission.

- Use the same approved logo and brand palette throughout.
- Maintain consistent heading styles and typography.
- Check that all panels are in the correct reading and folding order.
- Confirm that contact details and website addresses are consistent.
- Verify environmental claims before presenting them as certified facts.
- Replace example contact information with approved details, or clearly label it as a mockup.

- Ensure the final files are legible and professionally presented.

Important correction before submission: Your uploaded materials use different website and email addresses. The flyer references verdantliving.eco, the brochure references verdantsustainable.live, and the business-card mockup references verdantliving.com. Choose one approved set or label all contact information as illustrative placeholders. The brochure also includes a Portland headquarters address; do not present it as a real business address unless it is verified.

7. Conclusion

The Week 2 marketing collateral project extends VERDANT's brand identity into three practical communication formats. The flyer introduces the brand, the business card supports professional networking, and the tri-fold brochure communicates the brand's philosophy and material-design approach in greater detail. Together, the materials demonstrate how a consistent visual identity can be adapted to different marketing purposes while retaining a coherent brand personality. The final production stage should focus on checking consistency, verifying factual claims, and preparing print-ready exports.
